Steye

He spends over an hour playing with a cardboard box, a drum pedal and a microphone-like object. He's not listening to what's being said around him, and so he never answers the question about what exactly he is busy with. Until suddenly we hear a boom-boom-chk-chk. 'Wow! Check out this kickdrum... Sounds perfect!' he shouts, as happy as a child.

It's a neurosis. Steye makes music because he can't do much else. When not near an instrument or some beatable object, he quickly becomes, as he describes it, as irritable as a porcupine chicken. Music is the way Steye deals with the world. Through songs he turns his personal sores into something more manageable and swinging.

It's tricky to label his music. It all began with making some beats on a sampler and later he developed into a singer/songwriter. He casually combines Pri...
