Conro

Canadian producer Conro, was always destined to make a name for himself as a musician. Born into a musical family, Conro started playing violin at the tender age of seven. Later going on to play in the Saskatoon Youth Symphony orchestra, with a burning desire to spread his talents soon taking over, he took up piano, guitar and the drums, with a passion that continues to glow bright to this day.

Conro initially played in local rock n' roll and alternative bands, gaining respect and a following in his local community. His first foray into self-production was also far removed from electronic music, as he wrote and recorded two self-released folk albums, his first project under the Conor Patton name. His intense musical background soon morphed into the sound he's become most well known for, though it's not without its strong influen...
